What to expect from this belt:

For children this is the time that they begin to feel a bit more comfortable in their training. They have spent several months learning the basics and now begin learning self-defense, sparring combinations and begin to learn what the translations of the Korean words used in class are. Tag sparring also gets easier as they begin to learn the movements of others and their own reactive movements. With some children, learning Chon-Ji can be quite a challenge, encouraging patience and Indomitable Spirit usually does the trick, regular class attendance also helps.

Adults tend to feel the same increase in comfort for the same reasons that children grow in comfort. The blocks that can hit adults usually center on the One-Steps/Self Defense Combinations. The stepping motions are complicated and sometimes frustrating. Adults want to remember that being a beginner means that you do not have to know things perfectly (Mr. B has been training for a long time and still works on his basic techniques).
